TODAY'S PROGRAM: Dr. Mechai Viravaidhaya: The Privatization of Poverty

NEXT WEEK'S PROGRAM: Dr. Nantaphat - Stem Cell Technology - Ladies' Day

Kevin Beauvais – The Future of Luxury and Your Place In It

According to Kevin, airline and hotel prices in the Asia Pacific region will continue to move upward in the coming year and will be driven by the Summer Olympics in Beijing, as well as economic growth, high fuel costs, an increasingly mobile population and soaring demand. However, some of these cost increases will be offset by the growth of low-cost airlines and a focus on market share over profitability by the airlines in the short term.

Kevin Beauvais brought his considerable knowledge and experience in the hotel industry to Bangkok South last week and gave the club an interesting presentation entitled "The Future of Luxury and Your Place In It."

After starting his career as a driver in the Marriott Group in 1979, Kevin worked his way up through the company to become Country Manager Thailand for JW Marriott in 2001. After 2 years as COO of Minor International and a year's sabbatical, Kevin founded Invision Hospitality Co. Ltd in January 2007.

Kevin also feels that the business travel market will expand as demand continues to outweigh supply. Despite the price increases, business travelers will benefit from renovations, upgrades and the inclusion of new amenities in business hotels. Eco initiatives are also evolving into 'responsible business travel'.

"Travelers value cleanliness above all else and are becoming more environmentally conscious," he said. "Companies are expected to increase the focus on responsible business travel practices related to the environment and the safety and security of travelers."

In terms of "where the hospitality industry should be going", Kevin said the industry should encourage consumers to trade up, making the unaffordable, affordable. Also, since the current trend is for consumers to take three shorter leisure trips a year, hotels should be set up to facilitate shorter trips and at different spend levels.

His final two pieces of advice for anyone in the hospitality industry are:

- Let the market drive the project - understand the customers needs and build to suit with specific detailed standards.
- Give the guest what they want, when they want it!!!

For most of the frequent travelers in our club, this would be a welcome change.

QUARMBY'S QUIPS

I'm not saying that it was in any way a futile, dispiriting or an otherwise normal day. After all I did have a good lunch. But the main achievement of the day was to pose for a silly photograph - which we did - and well.

As the Pan Pac had so many better-paying customers, we were squeezed into just half of our normal room. 9 tables plus the head table, all full, visitors still arriving, having to be squeezed in on already full tables. But I suppose we should be thankful we weren't in the greenhouse.

Bernard sat next to me but had little time for small talk as he was plotting a major corporate coup. If next week you find you're working for him...you heard it here first. In deference to the intensity of the discussion, and not wishing to disturb, the waiters served him no food. And got a complaint for their pains. No good deed goes unpunished.

We met Kamthorn again, from the Dhonburi club. Brought along a couple of friends. He had been one of our most regular visitors, then disappeared a couple of years ago. Back now, he claims to have spent his time doing a Masters degree and becoming Adviser to the Great and Powerful. We wai'd him in awe. Still got the same blazer though.

In another triumph for democracy, the New Board (Thai for "blind finger") was voted in on a wave of relief from all non-members and despite protests from the chosen. Unopposed. And, in the case of SAA-to-be Mike, unmentioned. When reminded, he of the pea brain conceded that Mike was indeed on the list.

Burin gave a lot of money to the Asia Foundation to buy English language books and somebody explained how there was an enormous multiplier effect to our giving. But I didn't understand

Mike B was looking for new turkeys (or even vegetables come to that) for his Christmas dinner on the 13th. Strangely enough my wife has decided to come along. Normally she does not mix with my friends, says anybody who would get along with me is not her type. Maybe she's mellowing?

Mike Doyle informed us that "there is no good news in North America". Whilst in general I am not into good news, this particular comment is incorrect - my son completed the New York marathon in an ok time.

But our speaker Kevin Beauvais is one of those guys who seems never to have heard any bad news. Seriously nice chap, but makes me feel awful. So positive all the time. Works hard and successfully, motivates his team, has lots of fun new ideas and implements them. Very active in community and charity affairs. Of course he works on "Operation Smile", I think he provides the DNA!

Though it seems he did have a mid-life crisis. Went on a one year sabbatical a year or so ago. He's even positive about the MLC however. Came back with lots of great ideas, and took up the career more enthusiastically and successfully than before! Like Philip. How do they do it? Isn't it awful?

Some people live in a different world. Kevin was telling us that a growing number of business visitors are taking leisure during their business trips. Maybe a couple of days at the beach or in a spa. At our table we were gobsmacked. The consensus was that between meals, meetings and airports we don't have 5 minutes to ourselves on a business trip, I don't even have time to do my daily exercise, I finish trips exhausted. Who are these others who decide to put in a couple of days at the beach on a business trip? I suppose they must be the people who see no contradiction in "My place in luxury" The sort of people who react positively to advertising saying that one "Deserves the best" Not grumpy old guys.

The problem is that Kevin is such a nice guy that he wasn't even too serious about his positive message. At least that's what I understood in his comment that "Beaches continue to get hotter". And there was really not much doubt about his doubt as to whether anybody in the room had recently used a bathtub to wash themselves. "Who ever uses a bathtub...I mean in your own room?"

Which got Pea Brain onto such an exciting chain of thought that he broke off the microphone from its stand.

Philip sort of summed up the whole issue when he pointed out that he and Kevin not only shared the MLC experience but also lived from the same truth, that "Time is the ultimate luxury". And this is written Thursday lunchtime.

Pichai collected the Cosmos for charity together with the beautiful Ms Orn and Big Hakan won. With a deplorable lack of originality he announced that he would drink it in Cosmos.

Meeting Notes by PE-to-be John Quarmby

The Books for Thailand Foundation

At last week's meeting, James Klein, a representative of The Asia Foundation, accepted a cheque for 50,000 baht from Bangkok South on behalf of the Books for Thailand Foundation.

The Books for Thailand Foundation (BfT) was established in 1996 to work in partnership with The Asia Foundation (TAF) in providing new English textbooks and other learning material to schools, universities and other academic institutions, public libraries, and professional and civic organizations across Thailand. This program is an extension of the Books for Asia program that, since 1954, has donated more than 42 million books to over 50,000 institutions in 40 countries.

Books are mainly distributed to public school children in rural areas, but the BfT has also helped create special professional collections for government offices, as well as providing books for private Islamic schools and rebuilding libraries destroyed in the 2004 tsunami.

This past fiscal year, TAF/BfT distributed 79,399 books to Thai schools, libraries and institutions, representing a value of 90.7 million baht (USD2.7 million). The Thai government allows BfT to bring in the books duty free and the Foundation's costs are covered by a modest annual budget of 1.4 million baht.
